

Farmstead: View across the Lower Meadow to the woodland perennial border, herb garden and blueberry patch.

Cover Page Image: Relocation of a town road that cut in front of the 1806 farmhouse allowed for the siting of new barns and gardens adjacent to the house.

Space making: New dry-laid stonework throughout the site anchors the early 19th-century farmhouse, contemporary barns, and landscape.

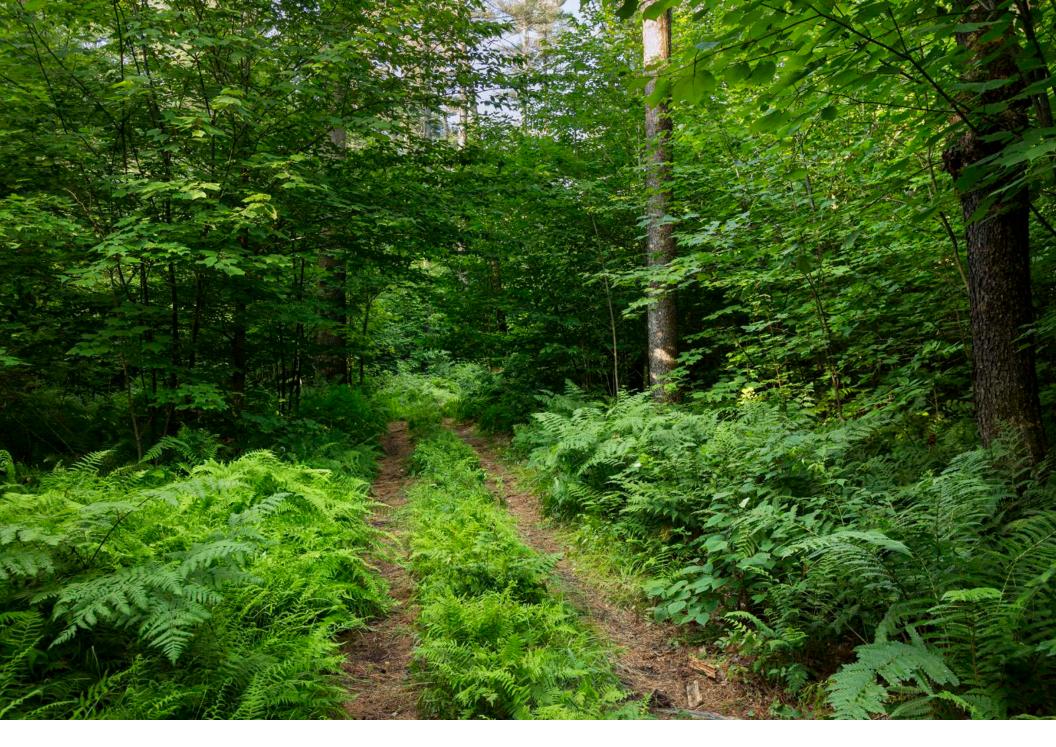

Stonework: Dry-stone walls were designed and built in collaboration with a local environmental artist.

Thorn Apple Border: Native plantings are featured throughout the landscape, including this woodland perennial border which sits beneath the mature limbs of Thorn-apple trees.

Stone Detailing: Stone steps, built with material gathered on site, seamlessly integrates with the New England landscape.

Forest Walk: Several woodland trails are being carved out of the site's wooded hillside, a managed Vermont tree farm, to connect the farmhouse to the new pond and the Green Mountain National Forest.

Pond: Affectionately known as Pork Chop Pond, this new water feature was constructed in an upper meadow.

Vegetable Garden: The informal style of the productive vegetable and herb garden features both open beds and fenced beds, for those edibles more susceptible to wildlife browsing.

Fieldstone Terrace: The fieldstone terrace is yet another stonework project completed in collaboration with a local environmental artist over the past 30 years.

Plant List Image on Next Page: Detail of plant border and barn.